Intro

Beware of too many sentences packed into a single speech bubble.

Putting the words into separate speech bubbles suggests a brief pause.

Widely spaced speech bubbles suggest a longer pause. Moving the bubble to a separate panel lengthens the pause even more.

When you're planning out the artwork in a panel, make sure you're leaving enough space for the speech bubbles.

Make the reading order of the speech bubbles absolutely clear. Create a "one way" path from one speech bubble to the next.

Try to avoid the "stem" of one speech bubble crossing over the stem of another one.

For interruptions, get the "cutting in" words as close to the interrupted words as possible.

The contour of the speech bubble can help convey various effects: shouting, words heard over a telephone, etc.
