The brain treats emotional hurt like physical hurt, showing we should take our feelings seriously. Feelings influence our actions and how we see the world a lot.

We act on feelings more than on cold logic, making emotions a big part of our choices.

Feeling alone leads to deep sadness, showing we need to feel connected and understood.

Enjoying someone else's bad luck gives a fake sense of being together, but real friendships celebrate each other's wins.

True friends support and are happy for each other's wins, helping grow strong, caring friendships. Even when things are tough, finding joy helps us feel better and ready to face bigger problems.
