This is a reproduction of the original artefact. Generally these books are created from careful scans of the original. This allows us to preserve the book accurately and present it in the way the author intended. Since the original versions are generally quite old, there may occasionally be certain imperfections within these reproductions. We're happy to make these classics available again for future generations to enjoy!

The Miller of Deanhaugh

Excerpt from The Miller of Deanhaugh In this labour of love I was cordially joined by my kind friends Mr and Miss Hepburn, who not only found employment for the widow, but through their intimacy and in uence with the members of Council, got the little orphan admitted into the Trades' Maiden Hospital, one Of the charitable institutions with which Edinburgh abounds, where she was brought up and educated. Many years have elapsed since my first introduction to that sweet child. Many changes have taken place in the world since that period; whole villages have been razed to the ground, and the p10 u gbebare has been driven over the site of many hamlets where I had Often met with kindly welcomes. New towns, new houses, have arisen, with which I have neither connection nor sympathy; new and kind friends, it is true, have proffered me their friendship, and the feeling has been reciprocated with no want of goodwill on my part. Yet, my heart still clings to the past with infinite love and amongst the few friends of those days still spared to me, there are none in whom I have taken.
