dropped a stone into a stream changed the level of every sea one man leaves another returns same day same door can't let on the squirrels think they're stealing tough ride home rain on ice was this little stretch always a hill fence long gone old iron gate still on duty in the chest high weeds beloved arbor the cycle complete your sturdy vines now hold you up cracked old birdbath strong enough to carry stars this winter's night all religion all law in mother's words play nice mind and body quiet now sh-h-h-h-h-h they think I'm fishing little summer pond from both shores teens and lily pads touching by august new england spring morning sun bamboo wind chime both working hard the greatest instrument for examining the heart is still old stone wall purpose lost in the woods and the moss honey colored sunset a mother's call children and shadows
