Fuller Harold North Fowler Christopher Mastropietro Aristophanes ...

Introduction to episode

Socrates the Monstrous

Socrates described himself as atopos, which means "strange" or "out of place," not belonging to any known category. It resembles the modern word "atypical" but is deeper and more powerful.

Metaxy: as fundamentally in between the human and the divine

Finitude and Transcendence

Eros

The monster distorts the normal categories in a way that is startling, challenging and disruptive.

Questioning

By practicing this kind of dialogue, Socrates has come to know that he does not know.

One has been pretending - deeply, unconsciously, automatically, reactively - to know.

Learned Ignorance

Horizon of Wonder

The psychoanalyst and social psychologist Erich Fromm successfully combined psychological and sociological thinking in a social psychological theory and method. World-wide known are his books Escape from Freedom, The Art of Loving and To Have Or to Be? and his humanistic concept of man. Professor Fuller's research concerns the relationship between psychology and religion as well as the study of contemporary religion in the United States

Wisdom begins in Wonder

Educe: to bring out, or draw forth. Closely related to the word "education."

To be on the Horizon of Wonder is to be in a place in which you are calling yourself and your world into question. So a new self in a new world can deeply be born.

The process of dialogos is not something we do. It is something we participate in, the way we participate in love and friendship. It is between us, and between us and the world.

Harold North Fowler was the original translator of a number of Plato's works for the Loeb Classical Library collection.

we seek to bind ourselves to things

We seem by nature to be looking for things other than ourselves, to complete us. Self-transcendence; I'm looking for something that's other than me to become me so that I am more than me, but completed as me.

The unexamined life is not worth living.

1) The best life is the life of virtue.

2) Virtue depends on knowledge.

3) He does not have the knowledge needed for virtue.

Aristophanes was a famous comic playwright of ancient Athens. His play The Clouds gives a critical portrayal of Socrates as a man of nonsense and deception. Socrates addresses the slander in Plato's Apology.

... 20th century, Continental philosophy., Christian religion ...

Is Socrates just Plato's mouthpiece?

Practice Intro.

Finding Your Root.

The humble wonder practice

There is so much I do not know about myself because of all of the facts.

There is so much I shall never know about myself because of all of the fate.

There is so much I refuse to see about myself because of all of my foolishness.

There is so much I am unable to see about myself because of all of my faults.
