Medieval baselayers: linen chemise and wool hose with wool garters. Leather shoes.

The neck opening is fastened with a small pin brooch.

The ribbons could be intertwined with the hair in between two strands , or used on top of a plait.

Add veil, a fillet/circlet and a belt and this layer was perfect for summer or indoors, informal wear.

A good example of hair intertwined with a silk, tablet woven braid.

Next - an overgown called a bliaut (or bliaud) in the period. Variants of the bliaut were worn by both men and women.

The fit was achieved through side lacing - and for the first time in centuries the shape of the body was made more obvious.

And a long woven girdle....

A linen veil to cover the head. Only the husband would see the hair uncovered and unbound, in the privacy of the bedchamber.

The whole set up is rather comfortable and easy to wear - and the men's stuff is comfy and practical too!

A toast to comfort!
