Sir Robert Howard's Comedy, the Committee

Contemporary manuscript transcription of Sir Robert Howard's play The committee, which was never published separately, but appeared first in his Four new plays (1665). Most of this manuscript appears to have been written by Howard himself -- particularly the title page, list of persons and parts of Acts I and III. The rest of the transcription was written by an amanuensis. For more information, see note of 14 October 1960 from dealer H.W. Edwards in the Clark Library institutional archive.

The Committee, a Comedy, Etc

From the Industrial Revolution through to our own comfortable, 21st-century digital age, Northern-born comedians have consistently been at the heart of British comedy culture. This witty and informative book questions why that should be so, examining a range of performers such as Les Dawson, Ken Dodd and the League of Gentlemen.
