As fierce as a tiger, as swift as the roe, The British Light Infantry rush on their foe.

Though rebels unnumber'd oppose their career, Their hearts are undaunted; they're strangers to fear
No obstacles hinder; resistless they go And death and destruction attend every blow.

The alarm of the drum and the cannon's loud roar; The musket's quick flash, but inflames them the more.

No dangers appal, for they fear no control, But glory and conquest inspires every soul

Rout, havoc, confusion they spread through the field, And rebellion and treason are forced to yield.
