Understanding Autoimmune Diseases and the Alphabet Soup of Tests Used in their Diagnosis and Monitoring

Overview

Autoimmune diseases are associated in complex and varying ways with circulating autoantibodies.

Pathogenic Autoantibodies: Examples

SLE: the prototypical systemic rheumatic disease

American College of Rheumatology (ACR): 11 criteria for classification of SLE

Sjögren's syndrome (SS)

Progressive Systemic Sclerosis (Scleroderma)

Main teaching points about systemic rheumatic diseases

Organ-specific autoimmune diseases (autoantigens)

Organ-specific diseases (autoantigens)

Intermediate group associated with pulmonary renal syndromes

What causes autoimmune disease?

Systemic Lupus Erythematosus as a prototype

Triggers / Causes

Pregnancy and Autoimmunity: A Complex Relationship because Pregnancy is Immunologically Unique

Social Factors

Utilization issues regarding autoantibody testing

3 Cases

The ANA test is not a good test for ruling in SLE since SLE has a low prevalence in the population and the ANA test is not specific. PPV = positive predictive value

The ANA-FA test is a good test for ruling out SLE since SLE has a low prevalence in the population and the ANA test is 95-99% sensitive for SLE NPV = Negative Predictive Value

Intro

Autoimmunity: Inappropriate activation of immune responses against self antigens

Central tolerance to self antigen is established during lymphocyte development

Peripheral tolerance to self antigen is established and maintained through numerous mechanisms

Tolerance to self antigen can be broken by genetic predisposition

HLA haplotype and sex have strong associations with many autoimmune disorders

Tolerance to self antigen is broken by inflammatory environmental factors such as infection

Autoimmunity often involves multiple components of an immune response

Autoimmune disorders can be categorized by effector mechanisms and affected organ system

CTL recognition of self antigen leads to beta cell destruction and insulin deficiency in type 1 diabetes mellitus (T1D)

Blood-brain barrier permeability allows for autoreactive T cells to trigger neuron demyelination in multiple sclerosis (MS)

Autoimmune diseases can affect many parts of the body.

No one is sure what causes autoimmune diseases.

Women - particularly African-American Hispanic-American, and Native American women - have a higher risk for some autoimmune diseases.

There are more than 80 types of autoimmune diseases, and some have similar symptoms.

Getting a diagnosis can be frustrating and stressful.

Often, the first symptoms are fatigue, muscle aches and a low fever.

The classic sign of an autoimmune disease is Inflammation, which can cause redness, heat, pain and swelling

The diseases may also have flare-ups, when they get worse, and remissions, when symptoms get better or disappear.

Sometimes doctors prescribe corticosteroids or other drugs that reduce your immune response
