STATE PROGRAMS Workers' compensation insurance programs are run by individual states and are designed to cover employee expenses incurred in work-related accidents or injuries.

QUALIFIED Qualified medical and family reasons include: personal or family illness, family military leave, pregnancy, adoption, or the foster care placement of a child.

NOTICE The law sets requirements for notice, by both the employee and the employer, and provides employers with the right to require certification of the need for FMLA leave.

TOTAL REWARDS • A robust benefits package can be the difference in your total rewards package. . But with the cost of benefits rising each year, providing a benefits package that helps you attract, retain and motivate talented people gets harder all the time.

TRADITIONAL BENEFITS PLANS • Traditional benefits plans contain the same set of benefits for each employee. • Creates administrative ease and represents a one-size-fits-all approach.

CAFETERIA BENEFITS PLANS Increasingly, companies are replacing fixed benefits plans with cafeteria benefits plans, which give employees a choice of benefits.

Intro

In general, a total compensation package includes some combination of wages or salary, incentive pay, and benefits.

BENEFITS The term for compensation in forms other than cash is employee benefits.

BENEFITS Different employees look for different types of benefits. Employers need to examine their benefits package regularly to see whether they meet the needs of today.

COMPLEX Benefits packages are more complex than pay structures, so benefits are harder for employees to understand and appreciate. Employers need to communicate effectively so that the benefits succeed in motivating employees.

REQUIREMENTS Some benefits, such as Social Security, are required by law. Other regulations establish requirements that benefits must meet to obtain the most favorable tax treatment EXPECTATION Even though many benefits are not required by law, they have become so common that today's employees expect them. A large employer without benefits would be highly unusual and would have difficulty competing in the labor market.

COMPENSATION Why do organizations pay a growing share of compensation in the form of benefits? It would be simpler to pay all compensation in cash and let employees buy their own insurance and contribute to their own savings plans.

... insurance, provides benefits, and services, to workers, ...

ELIGIBILITY Workers who meet eligibility requirements receive the retirement benefits according to their age and earnings history.

SINGLE TITLE States have also passed workers' compensation laws, which help workers with the expenses resulting from job-related accidents and illnesses.

INCOME About 9 out of 10 U.S. workers are covered by state workers' compensation laws. The amount of income varies from state to state but is typically two-thirds of the worker's earnings before the disability. The benefits are tax free.

FUNDING The states differ in terms of how they fund workers' compensation insurance. Most states allow employers to purchase coverage from private insurance companies. Most also permit self-funding by employers.

BENEFITS The most widely offered benefits are paid leave for vacations and holidays, life and medical insurance, and retirement plans. In general, benefits packages at smaller companies tend to be more limited than at larger companies.

RATES Rates for group insurance are typically lower than for individual policies. Also, unlike wages and salaries, insurance benefits are not subject to income tax.

INSURANCE Because of this, most employees value group insurance. The most common types of insurance offered as employee benefits are medical, life, and disability insurance.

DISABILITY Disability insurance provides protection against this loss of income. Typically, short-term disability insurance provides benefits for six months or less.

BENEFITS A logical place to begin selecting employee benefits is to establish objectives for the benefits package. This helps an organization select the most effective benefits and monitor whether the benefits are doing what they should.

... cost of health care benefits, and retaining employees,.

For the second goal, employees, say that benefits, keep ...

EXPECTATIONS Employees expect to receive benefits that are legally required and widely available, and they value benefits they are likely to use. To meet employee expectations about benefits, it can be helpful to see what other organizations offer.

SURVEYS Employers can purchase survey information about benefits packages from private consultants. In addition, the Bureau of Labor Statistics gathers benefits data

VALUE The individual choice in a cafeteria plan enables each employee to match his or her needs to the company's benefits, increasing the plan's actual value to the employee

COSTS Another way to control costs is to give employees Incentives to choose lower-cost options. For example, the employee's deductible on a higher- cost health plan could be larger than on a relatively low cost HMO.

Benefit requirements add to the cost of compensating employees.

STRUCTURE Organizations looking for ways to control staffing costs may look for ways to structure the workforce so as to minimize the expense of benefits.

NEW EMPLOYEES They may require overtime rather than adding new employees, hire part-time rather than full-time workers, and use independent contractors rather than hire employees.

EMPLOYMENT A number of laws are intended to provide equal employment opportunity without regard to race, sex, age, disability, and several other protected categories. Some of these laws apply to the organization's benefits policies.

TREATMENT Legal treatment of men and women includes equal access to benefits, so the organization may not use the employee's gender as the basis for providing more limited benefits.

... must take care, not to discriminate against workers, over ...

RETIREMENT Also, early-retirement incentive programs need to meet certain standards. The programs may not coerce employees to retire, they must provide accurate information about the options and enough time to make a decision.

DISABILITIES The Americans with Disabilities Act imposes requirements related to health insurance. Under the ADA, employees with disabilities must have mequal access to whatever health insurance coverage the employer provides other employees.

VALUE In practice, it is difficult for employees, and job, ...

LAW Some of the main features of the law included ending preexisting exclusions, requiring employer health plans to cover young adults up to age 26 on their parent's plan, ending lifetime limits on coverage for all new health insurance plans.

RESPONSIBILITY Under these provisions, employers will need to offer affordable health coverage to their full-time employees and their dependents or they may be subject to an Employer Shared Responsibility payment.

MANAGED CARE Managed care plans are the oldest of the approaches to health care cost containment and include health maintenance organizations, preferred provider organizations, and point-of- service plans.

HMO Health maintenance organizations (HMOS), the first type of managed care programs, originated in 1973 when the Health Maintenance Organization Act became law and allowed third-party payers to participate in health care payments.

POS • In a POS, the employee can decide which plan to use, as needed • The employee might use the HMO component to see a primary care physician but receive treatment following a referral in the PPO

PREMIUMS The HMO and POS options tend to have lower premiums (costs to belong to the plan) than PPOS because they require that the primary care physician decides whether an employee should be referred to a specialist.

HRA A health reimbursement account (HRA) is another form of ABHP and is another mechanism for paying for the health care costs of employees.

COSTS The purpose of these programs is to reduce health insurance costs by encouraging employees to become educated about their own health and to participate in programs to improve their health in general as well as their health on the job.

AWARE Because wellness programs make employees more aware of health and safety risks and educate them about how to stay healthier, companies that use the programs expect to realize substantially lower health insurance costs.

CONSIDERATION One criticism of wellness programs is that they don't typically take into consideration the design and furnishing of an employer's workplace.

DISCRIMINATION Another criticism relates to concerns of discrimination and privacy when employees are required to participate in health assessments.

EAP To help employees cope with mental health issues, substance abuse, and life challenges, companies offer Employee Assistance Programs (EAPs).

Employee assistance programs (EAPs) are a resource for employees dealing with personal problems.

SUBSTANCE ABUSE EAPs were started in the 1970s, primarily to provide a resource for managers dealing with employees who had or appeared to have substance abuse problems.

BALANCE Designed to help employees achieve a balance between their home and work responsibilities, these benefits include paid time off, child-care and elder-care assistance, financial planning, and concierge services.

CARE Baby boomers - people born between 1946 and 1964 - are most likely to feel the effects of child-care and elder-care responsibilities; hence, this group is sometimes referred to as the "sandwich generation."

LONG-TERM CARE Long-term care insurance (LTCI) provides assistance to aging, disabled, and ill persons who need daily help with tasks such as dressing, eating, or bathing for an extended time period.

Life insurance provides financial protection, or income, for an employee's family in the event of the employee's death.

SERVICE Your employer can require you to fulfill certain service requirements before you are vested in the money it contributes to your retirement.

For many years, the predominant type of retirement or pension plan for older, established firms in the United States has been the defined benefit

OPTIONS The employer specifies where the money is to be deposited, sometimes providing several options of places, and often gives employees the power to decide how that money is invested within a place.

CASH BALANCE A cash balance plan is a type of defined benefit plan that operates like a defined contribution plan because it defines the benefit a person receives upon retirement in terms of a cash payout.

TOTAL REWARDS To address this issue, an employer often provides a detailed listing of how much each benefit or service is costing the company in addition to the employee's basic salary.

DECISIONS Employers have to make decisions about which employees will receive which benefits, how much the employer will pay versus how much the employee will contribute, and how much choice

PREFERENCES Age, marital status, number of children, and other demographics of an employee affect the person's preferences for different benefits.

NEEDS To assist their employees with different types of needs, employers have developed a number of flexible benefit plans.

CAFETERIA PLANS Flexible benefit plans, also known as cafeteria plans, allow employees to choose which benefits they want to purchase from a menu of benefits.
