The first heap of wood chip in my Johnson-Su Bioreactor

Adam, who works with me in my garden, explains what he has seen happening with this wood chip

The second heap of wood chip - it's two piles, one older and one younger

Some info on acidity/pH

Some info on moisture

The benefit of having greenery in wood chip

Larger and undecomposed wood, and why this can be a problem in dug soil

Using a lawnmower as a mobile shredder for older wood chip - great to use as a brown when making compost

A third heap in another Johnson-Su style bioreactor - explanation of the pipe system

The importance when making compost of adding brown (in this case wood chip) to green - why they make a good combination

The effect of adding chicken manure to the heap

Showing compost from the bigger Johnson-Su that was in the same place the previous year

Explanation of how this structure was made, including materials used

Back to look at the wood chip from the first Johnson-Su - comparing the moist inner part with the dryer outer part

A look at the fourth heap of wood chip - an open heap without green, same material as in the tall Johnson-Su

Photos of samples from both heaps looked at through a microscope

A look at the fifth and final pile of wood chip - another open pile, of birch with more green

The benefit of having small pieces of undecomposed wood, when using as a surface mulch

The four main uses of wood chip - pathways, compost heaps, filling a bed, burning it

Using a kiln to burn wood chip - more on this in forthcoming video!

Using it for pathways

Adding it to compost

The result of adding wood chip to a bed as a main ingredient as opposed to surface mulch

What are Alkaloids?

Alkaloids are alkaline organic compounds containing one or more nitrogen atoms.

Alkaloids are mainly obtained from natural sources

Alkaloids are important because they have valuable biochemical pharmacological and medical effects

Some of the most powerful alkaloids include

I will now introduce you to some of the alkaloids I use in my herbal practice

Berberine for example is found in the plant Golden seal and used by herbalists to treat digestive issues

Symphytine is the alkaloid found in Comfrey which is used by herbalists to treat skin conditions.

Vincristine and vinblastine are alkaloids taken from the Madagascar periwinkle plant (Catharanthus roseus).
