The Life of William Denny

This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1888 edition. Excerpt: ... CHAPTER II. APPRENTICESHIP. THROM Italian duomoes and picture-galleries William Denny passed to the workshop in his father's ship-yard in Dumbarton, under the murky atmosphere of the Vale of Leven, to serve an apprenticeship of five years to the trade of ship-building. It was to be a very real and thorough apprenticeship; for Mr. Denny, while a kind-hearted man, was at the same time a stern father, and had no idea of rearing his sons to be fine gentlemen, nominally connected with business, but spending their time and his wealth in fashionable amusements and genteel idleness. He would not even run the risk of his son falling between the two stools of ship-building and learning. Therefore he determined not to adopt the advice given by Mr. Murray in the letter quoted at the close of last chapter--to send William to the university during the winter months. It was a very natural and proper advice for him to give, and the course suggested was a very desirable one if it could be carried out compatibly with attaining the end aimed at: that of making the lad a real, not a sham, ship-builder, or indeed a ship-builder of any sort. William himself probably was in favour of Mr. Murray's plan; it is certain, at least, that not very long after his apprenticeship had commenced he expressed regret that he had not got the benefit of a university training. One can understand and sympathise with his feeling, yet without hesitation approve of the decision come to. Going to the university would have issued in an entirely different vocation: that of a literary man, or more probably that of a clergyman; for at the time William uttered the regrets above referred to his thoughts were running in the direction of the Church. These thoughts were not whimsical. They...

"In this important and accessible book, a prominent expert on constitutional law examines these and other issues concerning the American jury system. Randolph N. Jonakait describes the historical and social pressures that have driven the development of the jury system; contrasts the American jury system to the legal process in other countries; reveals subtle changes in the popular view of juries; examines how the news media, movies, and books portray and even affect the system; and discusses the empirical data that show how juries actually operate and what influences their decisions.

The name of HMS Dreadnought is closely associated with the age of empire, the Anglo-German antagonism and the pre-First World War naval arms race. Yet it was also bound up with a range of political and cultural, national and international contexts, central to the Edwardian period. This volume investigates these contexts and their intersection in this symbolically charged icon of the Edwardian age.

Excerpt from Denny Genealogy, Vol. 2: The Descendants of William Denny of Chester County, Pennsylvania, and Allied Families of Culbertson, Gaston, McNair, Rodgers, Walker and Many Others Many persons, whose biographies appear in this book, also supplied records of their ancestors. The late Mrs. Mary (smith) Brinker was untiring in sending recollections of early days in Pickaway County, Ohio. Mrs. W. A. Phillips, a resident of Terre Haute, for eighty-seven years, has done the same for Dennys of Vigo County, Indiana. Mr. Charles Pinkerton, of Mt. Kisco, New York, gave access to an amazing manuscript book written by his uncle, Samuel Stanhope Smith Pinkerton. Mrs. Dorothy (greve) Jarnagin, of Athens, Georgia, supplied old Bible records and wrote the biography of her mother, Mrs. Jeanette Sterling (smith) Greve. Mrs. David Hart, of Leonia, New Jersey, assisted with the index. None of our own ancestors is recorded in this book. Begun as an academic study, as the original and unrecorded documents were discovered. The work became of absorbing interest. We hope the reading of it will bring profit and pleasure. It is an authentic social history of colonial and post-colonial times as seen through the life of two family groups, who bear the name and blood of Denny. About the

A well-disciplined army was vital to win American independence, but policing soldiers during the Revolution presented challenges. George Washington's Enforcers: Policing the Continental Army examines how justice was left to the overlapping duties of special army personnel and how an improvised police force imposed rules and regulations on the common soldier. Historian Harry M. Ward describes these methods of police enforcement, emphasizing the brutality experienced by the enlisted men who were punished severely for even light transgressions. This volume explores the influences that shaped army practice and the quality of the soldiery, the enforcement of military justice, the use of guards as military police, and the application of punishment. Washington's army, which adopted the organization and justice code of the British army, labored under the direction of ill-trained and arrogant officers. Ward relates how the enlisted men, who had a propensity for troublemaking and desertion, not only were victims of the double standard that existed between officers and regular troops but also lacked legal protection in the army. The enforcement of military justice afforded the accused with little due process support. Ward discusses the duties of the various personnel responsible for training and enforcing the standards of behavior, including duty officers, adjutants, brigade majors, inspectors, and sergeant majors. He includes the roles of life guards, camp guards, quarter guards, picket men, and safe guards, whose responsibilities ranged from escorting the commander in chief, intercepting spies and stragglers, and protecting farmers from marauding soldiers to searching for deserters, rounding up unauthorized personnel, and looking for delinquents in local towns and taverns. George Washington's Enforcers, which includes sixteen illustrations, also addresses the executions of the period, as both ritual and spectacle, and the deterrent value of capital punishment. Ward explains how Washington himself mixed clemency with severity and examines how army policies tested the mettle of this chief disciplinarian, who operated by the dictates of military necessity as perceived at the time.

The Epistles of St. John

How the introduction of steam, iron, and steel required new rules and new ways of thinking for the design and building of ships. In the 1800s, shipbuilding moved from sail and wood to steam, iron, and steel. The competitive pressure to achieve more predictable ocean transportation drove the industrialization of shipbuilding, as shipowners demanded ships that enabled tighter scheduling, improved performance, and safe delivery of cargoes. In Bridging the Seas, naval historian Larrie Ferreiro describes this transformation of shipbuilding, portraying the rise of a professionalized naval architecture as an integral part of the Industrial Age. Picking up where his earlier book, Ships and Science, left off, Ferreiro explains that the introduction of steam, iron, and steel required new rules and new ways of thinking for designing and building ships. The characteristics of performance had to be first measured, then theorized. Ship theory led to the development of quantifiable standards that would ensure the safety and quality required by industry and governments, and this in turn led to the professionalization of naval architecture as an engineering discipline. Ferreiro describes, among other things, the technologies that allowed greater predictability in ship performance; theoretical developments in naval architecture regarding motion, speed and power, propellers, maneuvering, and structural design; the integration of theory into ship design and construction; and the emergence of a laboratory infrastructure for research.

Personal and Family Glimpses of Remarkable People

Scotland's maritime heritage is a highly significant one, embracing as it does a quite outstanding contribution to Britain's development both as an empire and as the world's leading maritime power in the nineteenth century. Scottish engineering, ship-owning and operating, as well as business and entrepreneurial skills, played a major part in the success of the Merchant Navy, while Scottish emigrants took skills to every corner of the world, creating trade and wealth both abroad and at home. In terms of engineering, 'Clyde-built' was the Kitemark for the shipbuilding industry the world over. Scottish shipowners included household names such as Allan, Anchor, Donaldson and Henderson, while Scotsmen were instrumental in founding and, for much of the time, managing Cunard, British India, P & O, Orient, Glen and many other 'English' companies. The author tells an exhilarating story of energy and inventiveness, describing the remarkable navigational skills of the highlanders and the technological and business skills of the lowlanders, and relates the early development of the steamship, the impact of emigration, the involvement with exploration and the development of trade routes, and the final flowering of the world's last great iron sailing ships. And the evidence is still here, in the Cutty Sark, the Denny test tank at Dumbarton, and the Burrell Collection at Pollock, all reminders of a remarkable story. As seen in Scottish Memories Magazine.
