It wasn't until I turned 18 that I learned ASL.

It was isolating being the only deaf person. I felt like I was losing my language.

But when I went home, my mom noticed that my signing had changed drastically.

I tried six different schools but none of them were right for me.

At my last mainstream school, I had the same interpreter for four years in a row...

A big part of why I didn't like her was because she would embarrass me.

I didn't know that deaf schools existed, so the counselor explained all that it could offer me.

When I got to the deaf school I learned ASL and it changed everything.

I blossomed at the deaf school and ASL was a huge part of that.

My most recent travels have been more fun because I've been traveling with deaf-blind folks!

When we expose hearing people to the deaf world we realize that we have a lot of similarities.

We need to remember that the best teacher is experience.

When deaf people use their experiences to teach hearing people about our culture, we lay the groundwork for understanding.

Another pet peeve of mine is when people ask if I can talk.

And like, one of the most irritating things is when people find out I'm deaf

Being deaf doesn't mean that I can't do things for myself.

My biggest success is breaking down barriers for deaf people.

I want to tell hearing people not to be scared of deaf people.
