To The Absaroka

A man's word is the cornerstone of his character according to Ezekiel, Jeremiah's adopted father and mentor. Raised among the Arapaho with values according to their culture blended with the standards of a runaway slave and the remnants of the memory of his natural father, Jeremiah must now take the measure of his own character. After a tragedy that sweeps through the village of his wife's people and their own home, Jeremiah gives his word to Black Kettle and joins with his life-long friend, Broken Shield and sets out to find their new winter home. With the only possible site lying between the land of their avowed enemies, the Kicked in the Bellies Crow nation and the territory of the marauding Blackfeet, the two friends land in the middle of a battle between these two sworn adversaries. With the responsibility of the fate of the entire Arapaho village resting upon them, and opposition from both nature and enemy forces, they must overcome unimaginable obstacles for Jeremiah to prove that his word and his promise are the measure of a man with character that refuses to be compromised or defeated.

Excerpt from Vegetation and Soils of an Alpine Range in the Absaroka Mountains, Wyoming There are no long-term weather records from the study area. From observations made during the study, the general climate is believed to be similar to that of other alpine areas in the Rocky Mountain region. Winds are predominantly northwesterly and strong (20 - 30 km/h) throughout the year. Summer temperature data that might be extrapolated to Carter Mountain were collected by Johnson and Billings (1962) on the Beartooth Plateau about 80 km to the north. There, the mean July air temperature ranged from 7° to - 9° C. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
