Living Under Nazi Occupation in Poland | WW2: I Was There - Living Under Nazi Occupation in Poland | WW2: I Was There by WW2: I Was There 12,746 views 3 years ago 10 minutes, 29 seconds - Janusz Kent was 14 years old when the Germans invaded his hometown of Warsaw. He and his family were forced to live under ...

Four days later the German army entered the city, beginning a long period of German occupation.

Janusz was still at school, but the Germans were about to bring his education to an abrupt end. He found himself required to help their war effort in a rifle factory, but realised the opportunity for sabotage.

Such machine breakages were put down to inexperience, but it was beyond doubt that if anyone was caught sabotaging equipment the consequences would be dire.

Having witnessed atrocities like this, Janusz joined the Polish resistance movement also known as the Underground Army.

As Janusz gained experience he was transferred to a more combative unit where his actions became even more serious.

He was immediately ordered to execute a man who had been identified as a German spy.

Janusz continued to operate with the Underground Army, but was badly wounded by a sniper during the Warsaw Uprising.
