The Elderly Must Endure

Since its independence in 1945, Indonesia has experienced decades of rapid social change that have affected every area of life and have reached even the most remote parts of the country. The impact on the experience of the population has been equally significant, especially for those individuals who are over the age of 60 today and have lived through much of this period. This book concerns older members of the Minangkabau ethnic group, one of Indonesia's many local cultures. The Minangkabau have an ancient matrilineal social structure that is embodied in their local law and customs (adat) and that, in the view of many Minangkabau, is under increasing pressure in the modern context. Today's older Minangkabau are deeply affected by these challenges to the traditional way of life which relate to fundamental social patterns, such as the nature of the long-established tradition of leaving their region of origin to work elsewhere (marantau) and the structure of relationships within the extended family, as well as the potential value of traditional practices in modern society. The gap between their expectations that were formed early in their life and the realities of life in modern Indonesia often create serious problems of cultural consonance that represent a personal challenge for which there is no precedent and no established strategy to address. This book is based on a long-term study of older Minangkabau in modern Indonesia with a focus on cultural consonance. It profiles the members of one family from a village in the highlands of West Sumatra whose members now live in cities across Indonesia as well as in their village of origin. The challenges but also the opportunities experienced by these individuals, and members of the older Minangkabau population in general, are characteristic of similar social change experienced across Indonesia in recent decades and illustrate the nature of culture shift in the rapidly urbanizing and modernizing context of modern Indonesia.

The Young Shall Endure

Three young people, placed in a position as leaders for a world-destroying war they know nothing about, look for friends and allies. They offer, without knowledge of war, their unique and new-found magical abilities to fight against a vengeful, god-like man who wishes to destroy their home - Aerolan and, worse, their world - Narhtrae. They will learn to fight with those skills suddenly given them by secretive immortals who have vowed they would not engage in war. But, these immortals see the dangers lurking and determine they must provide a way and the help to save this world. So the three will bear the weight of decisions and actions they must make, often on the spur of the moment. If they cannot bring their strengths, and those of others, to full power, then Narhtrae, and Aerolan, will be completely destroyed. Will they be successful? And, if they do, what has their efforts cost them individually?
