Lecture #9- A French Jewish Atheistic Sociologist That Loved Religion: Durkheim's "Elementary Forms" - Lecture #9- A French Jewish Atheistic Sociologist That Loved Religion: Durkheim's "Elementary Forms" by Bernard Zaleha, PhD, JD 67 views 2 years ago 24 minutes - Lecture #9 - A French Jewish, Atheistic Sociologist that Loved Religion: Exploring Durkheim's, "The Elementary Forms of the ...

A religion is a unified system of beliefs and practices relative to sacred things, that is to say, things set apart and forbidden- beliefs and practices which unite into one single moral community..., all those who adhere to them. The second element which thus finds a place in our definition is no less essential than the first; for by showing that the idea of religion is inseparable from that of the religious community , it makes it clear that religion should be understood as an eminently collective thing It is obviously not out of the sensations which the things serving as totems are able to arouse in the mind; we have shown that these things are frequently insignificant. The lizard, the caterpillar, the rat, the ant, the frog, the turkey, the bream-fish, the plum-tree, the cockatoo, etc., to cite only those names which appear frequently in the lists of Australian totems, are not of a nature to produce upon men these great and strong impressions which in a way resemble religious emotions and which impress a sacred character upon the objects they create.

It is the figurative representations of this plant or animal and the totemic emblems and symbols of every sort, which have the greatest sanctity; so it is in them that is found the source of that religious nature, of which the real objects represented by these emblems receive only a reflection Thus the totem is before all a symbol, a material expression of something else. But of what?

The really religious beliefs are always common to a determined group, which makes profession of adhering to them and of practising the rites connected with them. They are not merely received individually by all the members of this group, they are something belonging to the group, and they make its unity. The individuals which compose it feel themselves united to each other by the simple fact that they have a common faith.
