Question There is a significant refugee problem in Greece and Athens lacks the financial capacity to address the issue. With regard to R2P, what can and what should we expect the world to do?

Much of the discussion on R2P revolves around state willingness to get involved and, currently, that the US gets involved. What are your thoughts on this?

While the legality of the intervention in Iraq has been debated, I would argue that the removal of Saddam Hussein averted a much larger disaster. Is there a case that we over-debate the issues when a speedier decision and response is required?

Can you discuss the issue of custom creation further? Are we likely to see R2P evolve from political custom to legal custom?

Dr Howard, can I ask you to talk to the case of Zimbabwe and South Africa's refusal to intervene to protect the population from President Mugabe?
