Introduction to The Tipping Point by Malcolm Gladwell

It is only an epidemic once the Tipping Point threshold has been crossed.

Ideas spread particularly fast with Connectors, or people with a vast social network.

Some people are born with the gift of persuasion and a knack for selling ideas.

In every network there are Mavens who amass information and pass it on to others.

An idea has to stick before it can spread.

External circumstances have a much greater influence on our behavior than we think.

Even the smallest changes in a context can determine whether an epidemic takes off.

Introduction to The Tipping Point by Malcolm Gladwell

It is only an epidemic once the Tipping Point threshold has been crossed.

Ideas spread particularly fast with Connectors, or people with a vast social network.

Some people are born with the gift of persuasion and a knack for selling ideas.

In every network there are Mavens who amass information and pass it on to others.

An idea has to stick before it can spread.

External circumstances have a much greater influence on our behavior than we think.

Even the smallest changes in a context can determine whether an epidemic takes off.
