During a visual inspection an oily spot is found on a hose leading from the compressor. Technician A says there may be a refrigerant leak in the system Technician B says today's R134a systems use mineral oil instead of the older R12 compatible PAG oil Who is correct?

A refrigerant service station is used to recover, evacuate and recharge an air conditioning system Technician A says the needle on the gauge should not increase and should remain steady after the recovery process is complete Technician B says if the needle moves more than 0.1 inches of mercury after the evacuation process is complete, the system should be checked for leaks. Who is correct?

A vehicle has poor air conditioning performance. The customer has added R134a refrigerant to the system Technician A says to use a refrigerant identifier. Technician B says refrigerant mixtures are not recommended, but will not affect system pressures Who is correct?

An air conditioner with an expansion valve performs poorly only during the hottest times of the day. Technician A says the receiver drier may be saturated Technician B says there may be moisture in the refrigerant. Who is correct?

Two technicians are discussing a CCOT air conditioning system Technician A says the system's pressure cycling clutch switch contains a bulb placed on the inlet port of the evaporator core Technician B says a pressure cycling switch is located on the low side of the system Who is correct?

All these statements are true about a (TPS) throttle position sensor EXCEPT Technician A says refrigerant flows from the top of the condenser to the bottom. Technician B says a restriction in a condenser can cause damage to the compressor Who is correct?

A cooling system is losing coolant. A pressure test has been performed and no leaks were found. Which of the following is MOST likely causing this condition?
