While it's clear that there isn't a single gene that causes depression, data do suggest that there are genetic factors, likely a combination of genetics that affects brain function.

In a study of cab drivers in London, MRI scans revealed that when compared to controls, there were structural differences in their hippocampus (a part of the brain known to deal with spatial learning and memory).

Medications commonly prescribed for depression inhibit the reuptake of dopamine and serotonin, and have also been shown to affect the expression of neurotrophins.

We can't experiment on live human brains in the lab, so outside of tools like MRI we often have to rely on animal models, and it's really hard to study something like depression in rodents. We have tests to represent "depression-like behaviors" in non-human animals, but there are big questions about whether those tests are really getting at the human experience.
