He was the first to teach the Dharma in the West, absolutely free from any cultural and religious limitations.

Chogyam Trungpa was born in 1940 in the province of Kham in eastern Tibet
When he was just thirteen months old, he was recognized as a the eleventh in the line of Trungpa Tulkus, important figures in the Kagyu lineage.
After being enthroned, Trungpa began intensive studies and meditation
He received ordination at the age of eight
His primary teachers were Jamgon Kongtrul and Khenpo Gangshar - great teachers from the Nyingma and Kagyu lineages.
But he had also a special admiration for Dilgo Khyentse Rinpoche.
At the age of eighteen, Trungpa Rinpoche completed his studies, receiving the degree of khenpo. In the late 1950s, it became clear that the Chinese communists intended to take over Tibet by force. Trungpa's monastery had been destroyed
In 1959. Chogyam Trungpa set out on an epic nine-month escape from his homeland
He suffered hunger and heavy gunfire, but in the end he managed to reach a refugee camp in India. Chogyam Trungpa's opportunity to emigrate to the West came when he received a Spaulding sponsorship to attend Oxford University in England
In 1968, Chogyam Trungpa traveled to Bhutan, where he entered into a solitary meditation retreat. This retreat marked a radical change in Trungpa's behaviour and approach to teaching
Soon after returning to England, he formally returned his monk vows and became a layperson.
In 1970, he married a young English- woman, and together they moved to North America
Mainly, because he began applying crazy behavior, beyond ordinary limitations.
His unorthodox and provocative actions attracted many students, who sometimes tried to copy him. You shouldn't imitate or judge the behavior of your teacher, Chogyam Trungpa, unless you can imitate also his Mind.
Traveling extensively throughout North America and Europe, Chogyam Trung- pa gave thousands of talks and hundreds of seminars.
He established major centers in Vermont, Colorado, and Nova Scotia, as well as many smaller meditation centers in cities throughout North America and Europe.
In 1974 Trungpa founded the Naropa Institute, which became the first accre- dited Buddhist-inspired university in North America
In 1976 he established the Shambhala Training program, a series of seminars that present a nonsectarian path of spi- ritual warriorship
In 1970's Trungpa's health began to deteriorate.
Chogyam Trungpa died in hospital in 1987, at the age of forty-seven.

His cremation was accompanied by the appearance of rainbows and other signs traditionally viewed as marks of enlightenment
