Guided Discovery Learning is an effective active learning strategy where educators facilitate students' independent exploration to construct knowledge. This student-centered pedagogy encourages inquiry-based learning, allowing learners to discover concepts and principles through carefully structured activities and problems, rather than direct instruction. It's a key discovery-based learning approach that promotes deeper understanding, critical thinking, and problem-solving skills, making the learning process more engaging and memorable.

Students can use these dissertations as models for structuring their own work.
