In ICH GCP you'll find the responsibilities of a monitor - The purpose, selection and qualifications of monitors - The extent and nature of monitoring and procedures

Duty of a CRA: Support the sponsor in several activities, Site selection Site initiation, Patient recruitment, Routine monitoring activities, Source data verification Reviewing critical documents, Informed consent forms, Serious adverse events reports

The right qualifications will be a good start - A general understanding of clinical research and/or life sciences background Clinical monitors come across a lot of medical and scientific terms - Competence in reading and understanding medical records such as ECGs or lab reports

Communication with the site staff is essential - The monitoring staff need to be able to explain complex topics but in a simple way, give a well-educated impression and provide the message of "I want to help you!"

Problem solving is an excellent skill to have as a good CRA. An excellent monitor will not only document the findings but will also find solutions to the problems found

Good CRAs will make themselves familiar with regulatory aspects of the study - An excellent CRA will be aware of country-specific regulations and laws - An excellent CRA will have the needed language

Monitoring visits are part of the daily life of Clinical monitors Traveling is a must for CRAs, a monitor that does not like travelling, is not in the right career choice.

An excellent monitor should be friendly to approach but also maintain a high level of professionalism, - It is important for a CRA in any situations to remain calm, show respect and patience

Which of these types of CRAs could you imagine, the site staff would be more willing to work hard for and provide good quality for? A nice and likable person or an unpleasant control-freak?
